Course Description

This introductory course in Latin American history covers the Caribbean, Central America, and South America from pre-Columbian times to the present. It emphasizes the development of the cultures, social institutions, political forms, and economic structures of this region, including the complex interactions between Native-American, African, and European societies and the significance of international political and economic connections. In addition, special focus will be given to Latin American historical debates on race, identity, ethnicity, racial inequality, ethnocentrism, colorism, and class hierarchies as it relates to present-day obstacles in Latin America and for Latinx people in general. Transfer Credit: CSU; UC.

Course Level Student Learning Outcome(s)

1. Given a key economic, political, social or cultural trend or event in the history of Latin America, construct a well organized argument, supported with relevant evidence, which evaluates the causes and/or implications of this trend or event.
2. Given primary and/or secondary sources relating to the history of Latin America, analyze their meaning and usefulness as evidence.

Course Objectives

- 1. Analyze the major themes, trends, and important events in Latin American history.

- 2. Demonstrate the ability to interpret primary and secondary sources relating to Latin American history and to compose an argument that uses them, as appropriate, for support.
- 3. Identify, explain, and differentiate between diverse geography, cultures, ideas, societies, institutions, technical and scientific advances, economic life, and states defining Latin America from ancient times.
- 4. Critically evaluate the evolution of racial/ethnic and class development in Latin America.
- 5. Analyze the connections and implications of these connections between Latin American societies and non-Latin American societies during the colonial and post-colonial eras.
