Course Description

The thoughts of the ancient Greeks still have relevance and greatly influence the world today. This course will take students on a journey through ancient Greek thought in order to examine those ideas and explore how these profound thinkers helped move Western thought away from mysticism and superstition to philosophical analysis and the scientific method. This course will cover the writings of the Pre-Socratics, Zeno's paradoxes, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, the Stoics, Epicureanism, and more. Transfer Credit: CSU; UC. C-ID: PHIL 130. C-ID: PHIL 130.

Course Level Student Learning Outcome(s)

1. Describe and appraise the philosophical questions that were raised by the Greek philosophers, including the pre-Socratics, Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle, as well as the arguments that these philosophers use to justify their positions.
2. Discriminate between questions that fall into different branches of philosophy, including logic, ethics, metaphysics, and epistemology.
3. Examine and debate problems of reason, belief and opinion, and the good.

Course Objectives

- 1. Employ critical philosophical skills such as the ability to critically evaluate the arguments, assumptions, principles, and methods of the philosophers under consideration.
- 2. Explicate philosophical texts of the ancient past.
- 3. Analyze primary theories with special emphasis on Plato's and Aristotle's standpoints.

Reading Assignments

Reading assignments will primarily consist of book chapters. They may also include additional articles, external links, interaction with the written work of other students, and the reading necessary for independent research.

Writing Assignments

At least one major paper will be required during the semester. This paper will require students to explain a difficult philosophical position and develop and defend a thesis regarding their analysis of this position. This is in addition to smaller writing assignments.

Out-of-class Assignments

In addition to their readings and questions given to think about at home, at least one major paper will be required during the semester. This paper will require students to explain a difficult philosophical position and develop and defend a thesis regarding their analysis of this position. This is in addition to smaller writing assignments.

Demonstration of Critical Thinking

Read and analyze texts. Exhibit critical thinking by engaging in class discussions about the philosophies of the pre-Socratics, Plato, Aristotle, and others. Students will be required to write at least one major paper and give shorter essay responses throughout the semester in which they will be expected not only to analyze and explicate material, but also to defend their chosen positions and analysis.

Required Writing, Problem Solving, Skills Demonstration

At least one major paper will be required during the semester. This paper will require students to explain a difficult philosophical position and develop and defend a thesis regarding their analysis of this position. This is in addition to smaller writing assignments.
