Course Description

This course will examine the concepts of right, wrong, good, and bad in the light of classical moral theories. It will include a critical examination of the foundations of ethics and present numerous approaches to examine and resolve moral problems. Attention will be paid to the application of moral theories to contemporary issues. This course will help students hone their critical thinking skills and navigate the modern world's complex ethical landscape. Recommended for all philosophy, business, and Information Technology (IT) majors, as well as all prospective medical and law students. Transfer Credit: CSU; UC. C-ID: PHIL 120.C-ID: PHIL 120.

Course Level Student Learning Outcome(s)

1. Identify and apply major ethical theories, terms, and principles in the Western philosophical tradition.
2. Evaluate the argumentative structure and justifications given in defense of various ethical theories and specific ethical issues.
3. Demonstrate the ability to defend ethical positions and judgments in a principled way, by supplying arguments and evidence. This is to be distinguished from mere assertion of personal values and arguments that are fallacious on casual inspection.

Course Objectives

Reading Assignments

Reading assignments will include textbook chapters. Students may also be required to read supplementary articles, links, and any research required for assignments.

Writing Assignments

There will be at least one course paper. Online courses will require regular forum posts. Tests and quizzes may require short essay answers. In evaluating these arguments students will find it useful, or even necessary, to research support for their claims, and/or to evaluate the evidence that others use to justify their own claims. The library provides one good resource for this.

Out-of-class Assignments

Students will be required to evaluate the ethical arguments of others and generate ethical arguments of their own. In doing so they may do research to support their conclusions, or sharpen their understanding of the material.

Demonstration of Critical Thinking

Students will demonstrate critical thinking abilities through objective tests and writing assignments. They will be required both to generate ethical arguments of their own and to evaluate those of others.

Required Writing, Problem Solving, Skills Demonstration

Students will be required both to generate and analyze ethical arguments through writing. They will be expected to break down and explain their reasoning in a step-by-step manner.

Eligible Disciplines

Philosophy: Master's degree in philosophy OR bachelor's degree in philosophy AND master's degree in humanities or religious studies, OR the equivalent. Master's degree required.
